> The London Echo is responsible for the following extraordinary story "We have great doctors in England, very great, indeed, according to the Paris Petit Journal, and the greatest of them all, strange to say, is one whose name we do not remember ever to have seen except in a novel-the Doctor ' Willoughby de Glenmore.' This marvelous surgeon, before whom Nelston and Paget must hide their diminished heads, has, it seems, for one of his patients a medical student afflicted with a most terrible malady. The poor young man suffered tortures in his head, the sufficient cause being that a whole crowd of myriapod jusects had somehow got into his skull, and habitually took their walks abroad over his dura mater. To cure such a state of things strong remedies were obviously needful, and the Dr. Willoughby de Glenmore' was not a man to shrink from the most heroic. He took the man's skull to pieces, severing it cleverly at the sutures and laying the scalp down carefully on his shoulders. This done, the doctor care-
